A book by a conservative author that goes negative on Democrat Barack Obama is set to hit the top of the New York Times bestseller list this weekend, the newspaper said this weekend.
According to AFP, “’The Obama Nation’ is by Jerome Corsi, who made his name by co-authoring, ‘Unfit for Command,’ which maligned 2004 Democratic nominee John Kerry’s Vietnam War record and contributed to his defeat by President George W. Bush.”
Threshold Editions, the new book’s publisher, said it examined “why the extreme leftism of an Obama presidency would leave the United States weakened, diminished and divided. Why Obama must be defeated – and how he can be.”
The book queries whether Obama ever abandoned his youthful dalliance with soft drugs and claims he has “extensive connections with Islam and radical politics,” and attributes his rise to national prominence to corrupt Chicago politics.
The book subtitled, “Leftist Politics and the Cult of Personality,” was released on August 1, and the New York Times reports that it would make its debut on the bestseller list for nonfiction hardcover books this Sunday.
As reported by AFP, “sales have been driven by hefty bulk orders, intense voter interest in Senator Obama and a major marketing campaign featuring interviews with Corsi by well-known conservative talk radio hosts across the country, the paper said.
