

Obama Pledges Support for Syrian al Qaeda

Contributed by Tom McGregor
Wed, Aug 1, 2012, 11:20 PM

No surprise, President Barack Obama has finally come out of the closet and disclosed his support for a CIA mission for al Qaeda-led rebels to topple the Syrian regime.

According to the Toronto Star, "U.S. President Barack Obama has signed a secret order authorizing American support for rebels seeking to depose Syrian President Bashar Assad and his government, U.S. sources said." He approved the order earlier this year to fund al Qaeda terrorism campaigns in Syria. He claimed that intelligence "finding," permits the CIA and other U.S. agencies to help aid militant-Muslim radical groups, so long as they claim to target Assad's government.

As reported by the Toronto Star, "this and other developments signal a shift toward growing, albeit still limited, support for Assad's armed opponents — a shift that intensified following last month's failure of the UN Security Council to agree on tougher sanctions against the Damascus government."

It seems apparent that Obama may soon announce that he really did indeed spark an Arab Spring in the Middle East, despite his earlier denials.

To read the entire article from the Toronto Star, link here:tmcgregordallas@yahoo.com