

Capt. Watson Says, "Japanese Dudes Arrest Me"

Contributed by Tom McGregor
Mon, Aug 6, 2012, 05:30 PM

Eco-terrorist Captain Paul Watson (aka Osama bin Watson), founder of the Sea Shepherd Conservation Society, had written a letter, dated February 10, 2010, and posted on his Website. He told Japanese whalers, "how about having some legal authority actually charge us with a crime. Maybe you should try suing us?" In the letter, Osama bin Watson confessed to committing crimes that included launching acid attacks against Japanese scientists conducting essential research and experiments. Apparently, Captain Watson is boasting that he "is traveling freely." He even hinted that the Australian government would help him if indeed he would ever jump bail. Osama bin Watson wrote, "you may call us terrorists, yet you are not banned from flying commercial flights, we have valid passports, and we are allowed to travel freely. I can even travel to Japan, if I so desired." He disclosed, "it's not illegal for Australians to assist Sea Shepherd activities." He also used racist terminology, calling the Japanese, "barbaric and horrifically disgusting." He accused Japanese men of breeding a culture of molesting "young girls." To read Captain Paul Watson's letter to Japanese whalers, link here: Tmcgregordallas@yahoo.com