

Interpol Warns Paul Watson, "Dangerous"™ Fugitive

Contributed by Tom McGregor
Tue, Aug 7, 2012, 07:06 PM

Interpol has just issued a code "Red Alert" on eco-terrorist Captain Paul Watson (aka Osama bin Watson). It is warning the public that Captain Watson has jumped bail and may resort to extreme violence upon attempts to capture him.

Captain Watson faces attempted murder charges for allegedly assaulting Costa Rican fishermen with a deadly weapon (seal club). He's eluding a lawsuit deposition that was scheduled for an Annapolis, Md. Court. He has also been accused of launching terrorist acid attacks against Japanese scientists.

Interpol fears that Mr. Watson poses a dangerous threat to the public when placing him on "Red Alert" status. They fear he's preparing retaliatory measures against innocent civilians.

According to the Toronto Sun, "Interpol issued a red notice for international eco-fugitive Paul Watson on Tuesday at the request of Costa Rican authorities, making him a wanted man worldwide."

Nonetheless, President Barack Obama continues to protect Paul Watson and his ragtag group of al-Qaeda eco-terrorists.

As reported by the Toronto Sun, "known for ramming boats and throwing nausea-inducing acid at whalers, the SSCS (Sea Shepherd Conservation Society) lost its charitable status in Canada, but it remains a registered charity in the U.S."

Interpol is warning the public: If you do see Paul Watson; please alert law enforcement authorities immediately and don't try to capture him alone. Capt. Watson is a violent man, who considers himself above the law. He's a dangerous fugitive of justice.

To read the entire article from the Toronto Sun, link here: Tmcgregordallas@yahoo.com