

Obama Blames Ryan for Drought

Contributed by Tom McGregor
Mon, Aug 13, 2012, 05:10 PM

President Barack Obama has hit the campaign trail to blame GOP VP nominee, US Rep. Paul Ryan (R.-Wi.) for recent drought conditions in the Midwest. Perhaps, Obama may soon blame Ryan for the nation's high unemployment rates, ballooning budget deficits, low economic growth rates, EU debt crisis, soaring crime wave, Ebola plague in Uganda and all other global catastrophes.

Fox News reports that, "Paul Ryan used his first solo campaign swing as Mitt Romney's running mate Monday to hammer President Obama as a jobs killer, forcefully echoing Romney's message, while Obama used a pair of nearby campaign stops to accuse Ryan of hurting drought-stricken farmers."

Team Romney had deployed Ryan to Iowa, while Obama kicked off a three-day bus tour across the Hawkeye State. According to Fox News, "Ryan, a Wisconsin congressman, was occasionally interrupted by hecklers during a speech at the Iowa State Fair but stuck to a meat-and-potatoes message of jobs and the deficit."

Ryan said in Des Moines, as you see the president come through on his bus tour, you might ask him the same question that I'm getting asked from people all around America, and that is, Where are the jobs, Mr. President?"

To read the entire article from Fox News, link here:

Tmcgregordallas@yahoo.com