An 8-year-old radical Islamic extremist girl is raising the war cry for jihad in Australia. She's giving lectures on the necessity to spread anti-U.S. violence on a global scale.

According to the Daily Mail of London, "shocking footage has emerged of a girl as young as eight speaking of her love for Jihad and the Syrian uprising during a video filmed at a Muslim conference in Sydney."

The little girl gave her incendiary speech in front of an Islamic gathering, while the Australian city is coming to grips with violent riots last weekend.

As reported by the Mail, "the girl - named only as eight-year-old Ruqaya - was filmed speaking during a 'Muslim Rise' conference held by the Australian chapter of Hizb ut-Tahrir in Bankstown, west Sydney."

The little jihadist girl is quoted as saying that, "children as young as myself can be seen on the streets joining the uprisings, risking their lives to bring food, water and medicine to their wounded family members, some of them never returning to their mothers . . . Nobody is too young."
