

Jimmy Carter Kin Help Obama Attack Romney

Contributed by Tom McGregor
Tue, Sep 18, 2012, 05:43 PM

President Barack Obama not only follows the foreign policy principles of former US President Jimmy Carter, but his $1 billion re-election campaign team hired "Welcome Back" Carter's grandson to conduct opposition research on GOP nominee Mitt Romney.

The Houston Chronicle reports that, "midway through a routine Internet search, James Carter IV stumbled upon a video that just didn't seem right."

Jimmy Carter's grandson, a self-proclaimed Democratic opposition researcher, had obsessively viewed YouTube video clips of Romney in search of "clumsy" and out-of-context quotes. Through a Google search he typed, "Romney" and "Republicans."

According to the Houston Chronicle, "something told him there might be more than the brief clip posted on the YouTube channel 'Anne Onymous.' Although not affiliated with any campaign or super PAC, Carter has made it a personal mission to help get Democrats elected in 2012 — and to do his part to push back against Romney's relentless campaign-trail mockery of his grandfather."

In speaking about Obama's campaign team, he said, "that gave me credibility."

To read the entire article from the Houston Chronicle, link here: Tmcgregordallas@yahoo.com