Apparently, Russian President Vladimir Putin and the Russian media have declared their unabashed love for President Barack Obama. The Moscow Times even berates GOP nominee, Mitt Romney's energy plan claiming that higher oil supplies means higher prices.

Let's take a look at the Stalinist logic of the Moscow Times, "Romney has unveiled an energy plan that aims to make North America self-sufficient in oil in 2020. The plan, which epitomizes the slogan of 2008 Republican vice presidential candidate Sarah Palin, "drill baby, drill," will open some federal lands for drilling, ease restrictions on oil production in some national parks and even wildlife preserves, and stimulate offshore exploration. Incentives will be given to energy companies to produce oil from shale, import shale-sand oil and invest in more efficient oil production in Mexico."

The Moscow Times explains the so-called results; "Romney's energy plan is a godsend for the Putin administration since it virtually guarantees very high global oil prices in the foreseeable future."
