Deposed former International Monetary Fund chief Dominique Strass-Kahn had lost his job due to an allegation of sexually assaulting a maid at a fancy New York City hotel room. Yet, that hasn't stopped him from continuing to live a life of debauchery, while creating havoc with the EU debt crisis as a so-called financial consultant.

The Daily Mail of London reports that, "shamed former IMF chief Dominique Strauus-Kahn is set to be hired by Greece to help rescue the bankrupt nation's collapsing economy."

Mr. Strauss-Kahn has been seen flying first-class to Athens last week, funded by Germany's EU bailout payments. According to the Mail, "and the 63-year-old "whose career has been wrecked by a catalogue of sex scandals "is set to become an "advisor" on how to solve the country's financial chaos, Greek newspapers said."

Nevertheless, Mr. Strauss-Kahn, a self-confessed swinger, still found time to chase after beautiful blonde women at a nightclub until 5 am.
