Scotland Yard has just launched an investigation over allegations that the late TV children's show host, Sir Jimmy Saville and an accomplice, were running a sex ring at the BBC.

According to the Daily Mail of London, "the Mail has been told that a BBC employee was allegedly given the task of procuring girls for the presenter and other men to molest."

It is also alleged that the member of the staff occasionally assaulted them himself. Gary Glitter has been implicated in the sex scheme.

As reported by the Mail, "now two women have separately named the former BBC employee. One, a former beauty queen, claims she was raped by him on the BBC premises."

Kim Anderson, the second woman, claims that Saville's alleged accomplice invited her on a tour bus to greet the star when she was waitressing at a Marleborne pub as a 19-year-old.
