

Romney Builds Momentum in Ohio

Contributed by Tom McGregor
Sun, Oct 14, 2012, 06:21 PM

Vice President Joe Biden's smirking can't stop the bleeding for the Obama campaign. Accordingly, Romney is building momentum in Ohio.

Columbus Dispatch quotes Romney as saying that, "I've had the fun of going back and forth across Ohio, and this week, I was also in Florida and Iowa ... in North Carolina and Virginia." Romney spoke to 8,500 people packed into the Lancaster Town Square in a recent evening for a rally that featured him and Paul Ryan his running mate.

According to the Columbus Dispatch, "Ryan debated Biden on Thursday night in Kentucky in their lone duel of the campaign; afterward, both sides were claiming victory."

Romney said, "you know what? There's a growing crescendo of enthusiasm. People recognize that this is not an ordinary campaign; this is critical time in the country. There's more energy and passion. People are getting behind this campaign."

To read the entire article from the Columbus Dispatch, link here: Tmcgregordallas@yahoo.com