Vice President Joe Biden, who loves to boast, "I always say what I mean," has hit the campaign trail to warn that GOP vice presidential Paul Ryan will "aim bullets" at Obama voters. Fox News reports that, "Vice President Biden lit into Paul Ryan with a violent analogy during his campaign stop Thursday in Las Vegas."

Biden said, "Ryan had written a book called 'The Young Guns' with two other members of the House ... Republican leaders in the House. You had, unfortunately, the bullets are aimed at you." The remark had drawn an immediate response from the Romney campaign, which earlier in the day had complained of the "negative" tone in the closing weeks of the race.

According to Fox News, "Ryan spokesman Brendan Buck called Biden's 'over-the-top' rhetoric 'disappointing but not surprising.'"

Buck added, "in the absence of a vision or plan to move the country forward, the vice president is left with ugly political attacks beneath the dignity of the office he occupies."
