President Barack Obama continues to stumble about his response to the deaths of four US citizens during the September 11 attack on the US Embassy in Benghazi, Libya. He described their needless deaths as "not optimal," when appearing on a pre-recorded interview with host Jon Stewart of the The Daily Show on Thursday evening.

The Daily Telegraph of London quotes Obama as saying that, "here is what I will say, if four Americans get killed it is not optimal … And we are going to fix it, all of it. And what happens during the course of a presidency, you know the government is a big operation at any given time, something screws up and you make sure you find out what's broken and you fix it."

The next presidential debate is scheduled for Monday, which would focus on foreign policy. Perhaps, it would be a good opportunity for Romney to ask Obama about the "not optimal" phrase.
