Since President Barack Obama's re-election bid for the White House is no longer sparkling, and he stands a good chance of losing to GOP nominee, Mitt Romney, the White House continues its war on Texas and Gov. Rick Perry. Obama is a full-fledged member of the United Nations' Human Rights Commission and UN election observers announced they would monitor poll booths in Texas on Election Day, despite State Attorney General Greg Abbott warning this is a criminal offense.

Additionally, US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton hosted a UN Observer Election Summit and called for UN monitors to "mess with Texas."

Vienna-based human rights watchdog Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe receives its funding from the United Nations. The OSCE director for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights (ODIHR) is Janez Lenarcic.

Reuters reports that, "Lenarcic had shared his 'grave concerns' about the threat of Texas prosecutions with US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the OSCE said."

Apparently, UN monitors have already set up its headquarters in Washington D.C. with "44 long-term observers deployed across the country," according to Reuters.
